This pedagogy uses technology, science, and art as approaches to teaching student's self-direction, interaction skills and critical thinking. The goal is to cultivate persistent, responsible, cooperative and courageous problem solvers. He focused upon bringing in real life challenges, co-operative skills, adapting modern technology and 21st century skills into our education system and curriculum. He then talked about various industrial revolutions and how the 4th revolution will help our students to engage in a world alongside smart machines and advanced technology.

He further explained the STEAM Pedagogy as:

S – Science

T –Technology

E – Engineering

A – Art

M – Maths

STEAM-Education emphasizes on teaching cross curricular subjects and 21st century skills. It deepens understanding and has impact for learning results. STEAM teaching is most successful when it is a part of the school's curriculum work.

Small children hold the ability to learn anything faster than an adult. So, if they’re taught in a happy as well as positive environment they can achieve a lot in their lives. Children should also be given creative ideas so as to enhance their creativity skills. Children are very good learners. They learn very quickly. For an instance, children learn to ride a swing or hold a spoon on their own by seeing people around them. Similarly, if taught in a loving, effective as well as efficient way they can do wonders in future. Hence, to build a good future environment, the kids today should be well developed.

STORIES THAT CHILDREN NEED

Ms. Meenakshi Jamwal from Delhi Public School Jammu attended an online webinar organized by the Indian Montessori Foundation on the topic 'Stories That Children Need' for the teachers teaching foundational classes of the Delhi Public Schools. The session was conducted by Ms. Rukmini Ramachandran, AMI Trainer, Managing Trustee, Indian Montessori Foundation and Director of Training at Navadisha Montessori Foundation, Chennai and Ms. Ruby Lau, AMI Trainer and Consultant.

Ms. Rukumini Ramachandran began by saying that stories are one of the creative groundworks of the Montessori approach. She said that in Montessori Pedagogy stories are an integral component of daily interactions with the children. There are many benefits of storytelling for young children as stories strengthen language, increase attention span, improve memory retention, inculcate creativity, and build emotional understanding.

Ms. Rukumini Ramachandran said that stories are a very intrinsic part of what teachers do for children. Teachers should find new inspiration and happiness to examine the story that children need. She added that storytelling has existed since the earliest of times. Sharing thoughts and experiences must have been the beginning of telling stories. Stories began with the commencement of oral learning. Life was so difficult that stories must have created bridges of joy. Stories teach children about places that they have not visited and help them to connect with people. Stories present common backgrounds and emotions. Every story gives an insight and a new point that was earlier not there.

Ms. Rukumini Ramachandran continued and said that the stories revolve around human actions. In the centre of the story lies a very profound action that comes from the human mind. The Plot of a story centres around the action of a character. Character unfolds the action. The children should interact with the character internally. They need to understand the relationship of the central character with others.

Ms. Ruby added that young children love to hear stories that happened to them. Reality based stories are what children might experience as human beings. At the age of 3 to 4 years, stories need to be reality-based and imaginary and at 6 to 12 years stories can be magical.

Ms. Ruby said that an aspect that appeals to children of 2 to 6 years of age besides expressions and actions is repetition, as repetitions allow the children to follow the action till they understand the story. They use repetition to find security and what happens next. She said stories should be narrated with actions. Teachers should make imaginary stories only from the life around. Anything can be a story and the details have to be repeated.

Ms. Rukumini Ramachandran added that reading a story does not have the freedom of an oral story. Words have power in storytelling. The story must be told without explanations, as far as possible, as it kills the story, the enjoyment of the reader should be transferred to the child. She said that books should be read with respect and love and illustrations should be shown to the children. The Montessori belief is that young children, especially toddlers, learn best through reality (concrete) rather than fantasy (abstract). When children begin to fully understand the difference between reality and fantasy, fairy tales and fantasy books become more appropriate. She also said that there should be a book corner and what matters is the number of books on the shelves and the way the books are displayed. Teachers should not point out the words and should give children an opportunity to enjoy the story. Building a library in class is the greatest gift teachers can give to the children. A Library is a physical and spiritual space. She added that Storytelling is the interactive art of using words and actions to reveal the elements and images of a story while encouraging the listener's imagination.

Ms. Rukumini Ramachandran said that while telling a story the storytellers may follow the text from a book or may choose to use their own words. Teachers should not worry that they need acting lessons to tell stories. Children remember the words by hearing them said over and over again.

This session was conducted by Dr Mona Sedwal, an Assistant Professor at the Department of Training Professional Development and Education, National Institute of Educational Planning And Administration. She began her session by saying that she would be deliberating in terms of how to integrate EVS and how to actually conceptualize the teaching of EVS. She said that it is very important to understand that EVS is not only one subject, but does a standalone subject comprise many subjects. She added that if we look at it more in the context of the policies, one of the major landmarks in the 1975 policy document is that a frame work was proposed for a single subject Environmental Studies at the primary stage. The first two years [class I – II] would look at both the natural and the social environment , while in classes III-V there would be separate portions for social studies and general science termed as EVS Part I and EVS Part II. India's national educational policy on education 1986 states there is a paramount need to create a consciousness of the environment. The National Policy on Education 1986 and the National Curriculum Framework 1988 also posted the same approach for the teaching of Environmental Studies at the primary stage. She highlighted that for integrating subjects for a new understanding, teachers working on an integrated approach should not proceed with lists of topics from different subjects, but instead propose themes that allow for a connected and inter-related understanding to develop. The Environmental Education introduced as EVS at the elementary education level has important objectives such as developing curiosity and awareness about the environment in children. The resource person added that a lesson plan is necessary to give guidelines for conducting learning activities. Dr Mona Sedwal concluded the session by saying that always be sensitive and flexible in relating the curriculum with daily activities to make it more interesting and relevant for children. She said that teachers must be attentive to the needs of all the children in the class. Overall, it was an informative and fruitful session that I really enjoyed. It provided us the useful information which would help us to clear the concepts with great precision.
